Integrity Technology Solutions, a Bloomington, IL based company, has served the K-12 market by providing SIF integration and software development services to schools and software vendors. In an effort to better serve its current and future clients, sustain continued growth, and provide superior products and services, a new company has been formed named Integrity Schools. Harlan Geiser, the owner of Integrity Technology Solutions and Integrity Schools will serve as CEO.

Integrity Schools mission is to help schools integrate, consolidate, and disseminate information using open, standards-based technologies. Integrity Schools core offerings include Schools Interoperability Framework (SIF) implementation and support services, Business Intelligence solutions, and SIF Agent consulting for software vendors. Dave Moravec has been named as the company's President. Mr. Moravec will manage day-to-day operations as well as client and vendor relationships. Jason Wrage has accepted the position of Chief Technology Officer for Integrity Schools. As the CTO, Mr. Wrage will manage product development, delivery and innovation.

"I am truly excited about the future of Integrity Schools and the K-12 technology market place," Mr. Moravec said. "The change in corporate structure provides us additional resources and a direction all our own. We have solid support from our ownership and are looking forward to building on the tremendous reputation that we have built over the years. In tough economic times companies have an opportunity to make good strategic decisions. All of us are in agreement that this change will be good for our clients, partners, staff, and for our future corporate direction."

Mr. Wrage commented that "we are in a great place right now, and all of us feel that the future of this market has huge potential. Forming Integrity Schools will allow us to focus on what we do best: connecting people and information for the betterment of education."

Integrity Schools will soon look to expand its core team of SIF experts with additional developers and support personnel. It is with great pleasure that we announce that Brenda Leopard joins the Integrity Schools team as the Client Services Coordinator. Ms. Leopard brings years of organizational experience with her, and will be a valuable resource for our clients.

A new website, located at <http://www.integrityschools.com>, has been launched to provide more information about Integrity Schools and its solutions.
